SPECIAL CENTURY-END ISSUE

Greetings from the Maryville College Campus!

The last fall of the century! And an exciting fall it is! Maryville College has grown to the 1,000 mark in enrollment for the first time in history. Construction is underway on two major projects: the rebuilding of Fayerweather Hall and the renovation and expansion of Bartlett Hall to create a splendid new student center. A beautifully restored Center for Campus Ministry is in frequent use. The College is implementing a major technology initiative that promises to be nothing short of transforming for the campus. And we are celebrating recognition for the fifth time by U.S. News & World Report as a top-10 Southern regional liberal arts college.

One hundred years ago things were also exciting for Maryville College. Collegiate enrollment had grown from the 13 students present when the College reopened in the fall of 1866 to 93 in the fall of 1900 (plus another 309 preparatory students). Fayerweather Science Hall was new. Bartlett Hall was almost completed as Maryville's first student center. The fourth president of the College, Dr. Samuel Ward Boardman, was entering his last year of service after presiding over the decade that saw more progress than any decade since the College was founded in 1819, progress that included the addition of the technological advancement of the time – electric lights!

I sometimes wonder what President Boardman and the faculty, staff, directors and students of the College would have projected for Maryville as they stood on the threshold of the 20th century. Would they have predicted an enrollment growth of nearly 1,000 percent by the year 2000? Would they have foreseen the 40-percent increase in campus acreage and the tripling of major campus buildings? Would they have expected several major curriculum revisions with new major programs ranging from Environmental Studies to American Sign Language? Would they have guessed that the preparatory department, with about three times the enrollment of the collegiate department, would disappear entirely? Could they possibly have extrapolated from electric lights to the World Wide Web in every residence hall room?

In this issue of FOCUS we look back over the century that has passed since Dr. Boardman's day. At Maryville College we are keenly aware that awareness of and appreciation for the past is important even as we look toward another new century. Knowing that the progress of the MC2000 period is built on the foundation laid down by others, we give thanks for all those whose labors have brought Maryville College to the dawn of the 21st century. The overarching aim of the MC2000 Plan has been to assure that the College enters the new century in a position of the greatest strength that it has enjoyed in its 181-year history. I invite all the readers of FOCUS to reflect with us on Maryville's progress during the century just past, to celebrate with us the achievements of the present, and to envision with us the Maryville College of the future.

The envisioning of the future century is, of course, a tricky business. The best futurist among us can't possibly imagine the world or the College of the year 2100. (If you doubt this, find a magazine from, say, 1950, and see what was projected for the year 2000!) Change in the world around us is increasing at a breath-taking pace. All we can say with certainty is that the Maryville College of 2100 will be as different from the college of 2000 as Dr. Boardman's college was from Maryville today – and that's probably understated.

What is important is to recognize that we not only can shape Maryville's future, but that we have an obligation to do so. We have an obligation both to build and preserve, to reach for new heights and to hold firmly to the faith, the principles, the sense of mission that have brought this college through an amazing century. As we enter the homestretch of the MC2000 Plan, we are beginning a new strategic planning process that will assure that the College is not merely buffeted about by external changes, but that we set thoughtfully and boldly the course we want to follow.

Samuel W. Boardman

SPECIAL THANKS:

The editorial staff of FOCUS would like to recognize those historians – living and dead – who have recorded, researched and written the history of Maryville College. For stories published in this issue, writers consulted four history books: Samuel Tyndale Wilson’s “A Century of Maryville College” and “Second Century Beginnings;” Dr. Ralph W. Lloyd’s “Maryville College: A History of 150 Years;” and “By Faith Endowed,” written by Dr. Arda Walker and Dr. Carolyn Blair.

Because of the volunteer efforts of Mary Gladys Brown Pieper, Lynn Ann Brown Best and Jane Huddleston in the College’s archives, the writers were also able to locate important documents and pictures.

In 1912, aviation legend Orville Wright responded to a letter written to him by Samuel Boardman, then president emeritus of Maryville College. "Your very kind letter of June 14th was duly received," Wright wrote. "The matter of combining the principle of the balloon and flying machine has been considered by a number of persons, and some actual attempts have been made to do it, but without success. If the gas bag is made large enough to have any lifting effect, its resistance is so great and its speed so slow that the efficiency of the aeroplanes is almost entirely overcome."

Ten years after Boardman's death in 1917, the world would become a little smaller and life's pace would become a little faster when Charles Lindbergh would land the Spirit of St. Louis in Paris, following a 33-hour solo flight across the Atlantic Ocean.

One has to wonder if Samuel Boardman ever envisioned the day when the masses would travel by air ... or when the president of Maryville College himself (or herself) would depend on such a device – "flying machine" or "aeroplane" – to visit constituents and donors across the country.

Certainly the thought of receiving Orville Wright's response by fax or e-mail would have astonished even Boardman, who was highly educated and forward-thinking.

Today, Maryville College lives with these realities – the airplane, the fax machine, the Internet – and many others. Science and technology guarantee that the 21st century will be filled with more change. But one reality of yesteryear rings as true today as it did in 1900: Maryville College is

"... Maryville gathers within its walls an exceptionally earnest body of young people. Many of them have some definite vocation in mind before entering, and lend all their energies toward adequate preparation for it." – Samuel Tyndale Wilson, 1916

As a high school senior, Nikki Noto knew that she was being called to be a minister. What she didn't know was where God was calling her to begin her higher education.

The daughter of a Presbyterian minister and a young woman deeply involved in Presbyterian youth organizations, Noto eventually settled on a Presbyterian-affiliated school in South Carolina.

But it was not for her.

"What I was looking for was a school with a connectedness to the church and the community," Noto explained. "I didn't feel that at all where I was."

At that point, the Sweetwater, Tenn., native remembered a conversation she had had with Maryville College Chaplain Stephen Nickle prior to her first semester in South Carolina.

"Stephen Nickle's father was my father's professor at Columbia Seminary in Decatur, Ga.," Noto said. "We had met somewhere, and I told him where I was going to college.

"He asked me, 'Are you sure you want to go there?'" she continued. "When I told him I was sure, he asked me to keep Maryville in mind in case things didn't work out."

Things didn't work out, and Noto transferred to Maryville College for the second semester of her freshman year. But she still wasn't sure whether or not the East Tennessee school was where she was meant to be.

"I assumed that I would come here for a semester and then go elsewhere," she said. "But here I found what I was looking for: a connection to the community and a connection to the church as a whole."

At Maryville, Noto is double majoring in religion and theatre. Completing the requirements for two majors demands a lot of classroom and study time, but whatever free time she has left, Noto fills with extracurricular activities that mirror her passions. Noto has become a regular cast member on the MC stage, and she contributes much to the spiritual life of the campus.

It was during the summer of 1998 when Noto and another student, Sara Baker '99, decided to form "Sisters in Spirit," a campus organization whose purpose is to encourage women on campus to discuss their faith, become educated about world issues that affect humankind and involve themselves in service.

"We attended the National Network of Presbyterian Women in St. Louis and learned about the need for women to connect on a spiritual level," Noto said. "We felt that we needed to start a group that would provide that kind of community."

With a mailing list of 70 students, Sisters in Spirit has received a wonderful response from women on campus, Noto said. Last May, the group was recognized as the best student organization by the College's Student Development Office.

Noto said she knows she will be a leader in the church "in some way" following graduation. Seminary is a likely possibility for Noto; information from McCormick and Columbia seminaries is already appearing in her mailbox. The Presbyterian Church's Young Adult Intern Program interests her, as well, because of the opportunity to serve in women's ministries.

Her experiences at Maryville College have opened her eyes to the broad scope of ministry, she said.

“Never let a professor of this institution say, as one of the professors of one of our larger institutions is reported to have said: ‘We are not responsible for the character or the morals or the vices of our students; only for their instruction.’ Let this College continue to accept responsibility for character as well as teaching.” – Rev. E. A. Elmore of the Synod of Tennessee at the inauguration of Dr. Wilson, 1901

They are her heroes.

They minister to her – not always in an “overt kind of way,” but by showing the love of Christ through compassion and concern, she said.

“They’re incredible people doing interesting things with their lives,” Nikki Noto said of her professors and faculty mentors. “I feel privileged to have them as teachers.”

Perhaps no thread runs more visibly and strongly through Maryville College’s history than that of faculty admiration.

Dr. Wayne Anderson, the College’s eighth president, once told an audience in 1982 that he kept in his desk a thick file of “heartwarmers” – letters from former Maryville College students who wished to thank faculty members for having “profound impacts” on their lives and showing concern for them as individuals.

Maryville College President Dr. Gerald Gibson frequently hears similar testimonials as he travels the country for alumni gatherings.

“The faculty I hear about the most often are Arda Walker ‘40, Fred Griffiths ‘25, Dr. Hunter ‘14, Professor Howell ‘22, Dr. Orr ‘12, Art Bushing ‘43, Carolyn Blair, Mrs. Cummings, Elizabeth Jackson,” the president said. “Over and over I hear how these teachers changed and shaped the lives of these former students.

“Most often the emphasis is on the standards they set, the genuine care they demonstrated for their students and the invaluable skills they imparted,” he added.

Sadly, many of the faculty members Dr. Gibson reads about have passed on. And even though Edwin Hunter, Horace Orr and Elizabeth Jackson will never be replaced, several current Maryville College faculty members are on that legend-track.

And to alumna and registrar Martha Hess ‘67, there are striking similarities between the faculty members she learned from 30 years ago and those with whom she works today.

On her drive home late one afternoon, she saw Associate Professor of Biology Dr. Paul Threadgill and several students on campus, labeling the trees. She said it immediately brought back fond memories of Dr. A. Randolph Shields ‘34, who chaired the Division of Natural Sciences for many years before retiring in the early 1970s.

The combination of gruff exterior and kind heart seen in Threadgill also makes her think of Shields.

“He’s a wonderful advisor. He cares about his students,” Hess said of the biology professor. “I never worry about Paul’s advisees being short on credits or requirements for graduation.”

Dr. Russell Parker

grammarian with a capital ‘G.’ She spoke very precisely and clearly,” the registrar said. “Lynn’s speech is also very accurate and precise. I’m sure her teaching is like that.”

Johnson was a beauty queen while at Maryville College in the early part of the century, and Coning’s blond hair and fair features serve as another reminder of their similarities.

To the best teacher she ever had in her life, Hess compares Dr. Dean Bolden, professor of sociology and former dean of the College.

“Dr. Arda Walker gave her students the wonderful foundation you have to have when you study history,” Hess said. “Her travel experiences made the difference. She brought those experiences into the classroom, so her students learned more than the dates, the places and the people of history. They learned about the hearts of the people.”

Bolden, who took a sabbatical and traveled the Middle East last year, will teach the first World Cultures 350: Comparative Cultures class this spring.

“The basis of his teaching comes from his travels,” Hess said. “He has to travel to be the teacher he is.”

Local interest – and not so much international – creates for Hess a similarity between Dr. Russell Parker and Dr. Chad Berry.

Parker, who chaired the history department until his death in 1987, studied the history of the Alcoa community and was interested in the Cherokee history of the area. Berry, a native Hoosier and assistant professor of history, has become an active member of the city of Maryville’s Historic Zoning Commission and the College Hill Historic District. He works to preserve the historical neighborhoods in Maryville.

Berry said he is “honored” to be compared to Parker. Before the history department moved into Anderson Hall, Berry occupied the same office as Parker and said he often “felt [Parker’s] presence.”

“We are both American historians,” Berry said of himself and Parker. “And another similarity is that Dr. Parker taught African history here. I teach southern African history now.”

Junior Nikki Noto is double majoring in religion and theatre. Considering seminary study after Maryville, she believes she will be a leader in the church during her lifetime.

Hess never met the legendary Lady Jane Bancroft Smith Alexander, but from what she has read, Hess said Dr. Susan Schneibel is doing for the Humanities what Lady Jane did for the division in the early 1900s.

But the similarities don't stop there, Hess said.

"The breadth of what they can teach is very similar," the registrar said. "Lady Jane taught French, German, history and literature. She was also very educated – I think she spent a year at the Sorbonne.

"Susan has studied abroad and teaches similar courses," Hess continued.

Because of the collective efforts of Alexander and Schneibel, the English and history departments of Maryville College have been "particularly strong" and will continue to be strong, she said.

Lady Jane Alexander

"The general object of the courses of study is the thorough and symmetrical development of the intellectual powers and moral character of the student – not so much to make specialists as to graduate men fully equipped for the highest demands that may be made of college-bred men everywhere. The liberally educated man is best equipped for achieving success in any special work to which he may be called in subsequent life." – The Maryville College Bullerlin, 1905

For the Senior Thesis project she will begin during the Spring 2000 semester, Nikki Noto will combine her religion and theatre majors into a single project. Currently, she believes that project will take the form of a play based on the biblical book of Esther.

Noto said she is interested in studying the feminism demonstrated by Queen Vashti and Queen Esther.

While students at the turn of the 20th century would have certainly studied the Bible, they would not have been required to write a Senior Thesis. Though several students wrote theses as part of an Honors Work program, it wasn't until the curriculum revision of 1947 that they had to undertake the research and writing project (then called "Special Studies").

More than five curriculum revisions have occurred since 1900, but general education courses have always reflected the values of a liberal arts education.

The 1905 catalog places courses into 10 "groups," which would likely be considered "majors" by today's standards. The groups were: classical, Greek, Latin, English, English literature, modern languages, chemistry, biology, mathematics and economic and political science. Eight of the 13 graduates in 1905 concentrated their studies in Latin.

In 1910, students were required to complete 36 courses before earning the bachelor of arts degree. By 1923, the requirement had changed to 126 semester hours. The "liberal arts course," as outlined in the 1923 catalog, recommends a balance of Bible, math, history, natural science, ancient or modern languages, English and physical training courses for freshman and sophomore students.

Dr. Edwin Hunter, who served as dean of curriculum from 1935 until 1957, started the first formal counseling and orientation programs for freshmen in 1931. Honors work was offered in 1932, which included comprehensive exams at the end of study. By 1937, comprehensive exams were adopted as a requirement for graduation.

Hunter led the curriculum revision of 1947, for which he and other faculty members spent three years planning. The Special Studies requirement was considered the "cornerstone" of that revision, but also included two other objectives: a strong core of general education courses (with an emphasis on Western World history and literature, instead of strictly American history and literature) and a reduction in both the number of courses offered and the number of classes a student could take per semester. The latter objective was adopted to give students greater opportunity to concentrate their studies.

Twenty-five majors (not including teacher licensure) were offered in that curriculum.

The next major revision was implemented in the fall of 1967 and designed to "take into account the latest developments in education." In contrast to the curriculum of the 1940s and 1950s, the core curriculum had four new emphases. First, it attempted to make clearer the interrelationships among the disciplines. Secondly, it strengthened the courses and requirements for non-Western studies. Thirdly, it brought into the curriculum – through the introduction of philosophy courses for the freshmen – a concern for values. Lastly, the curriculum of 1967 created more opportunities for students to complete experiential studies.

Courses that offered both interdisciplinary study and independent study were offered during the four-week period between the end of fall term and the beginning of Christmas break, beginning in 1967. Called "interim," the course was eventually moved to three weeks in January – after Christmas break and before spring semester.

In the early 1980s, the curriculum was fine-tuned to meet more expectations in the job market. New majors like computer science, management, international studies and pre-professional health sciences joined the relatively new major in Sign Language Interpretation (a formal major since 1974).

Students wishing to minor in available studies were able to after the curriculum revision of 1982. Mountain Challenge participation became a popular one-hour course for freshmen in 1986.

The latest curriculum revision was implemented in 1996. A curriculum task force of faculty, staff and students submitted for approval general education courses that "emphasize the cultivation of those intellectual and personal qualities that mark the educated person." The college catalog reads: "Through the enhancement of skills and knowledge, the deepening of sensitivities and the clarification of personal purpose, students learn to deal responsibly with a world of uncertainty and accelerating change."

Today, 60 credit hours of "core" curriculum courses are required for a bachelor of arts degree. In addition to classes in composition, statistics, Biblical studies, fine arts and natural and social sciences, students now enroll in "seminars" – freshman and senior seminars – that "provide coherence along with solid beginnings and a clear culmination to the liberal arts experience."

Values and ethics are issues discussed in each of the 49 majors offered at Maryville. It is this distinction of the Maryville College general education curriculum that led the John Templeton Foundation to rank the College in its honor roll for "character-building" colleges.

And it is this general education curriculum under which Noto will graduate in 2001. It's given her a "good foundation to stand on," she said, wherever God calls her to stand.

"Being in the pulpit – I'm open to that. Or being a missionary or an educator," she said. "Maryville College has taught me that I can do these things, and I feel prepared to do them."

WITHIN these HALLS

by Laurie Grogan, Director of Public Relations

If walls could talk, the historic buildings on the Maryville College campus would be humming with the stories of generations. Until structures gain the ability to speak, however, they must find their voices in the people who live, work, and learn within them.

One of the most prominent of these voices is certainly Dr. Sarah McNiell '53, who experienced life at the College as both a student and a history professor. McNiell, who calls the campus, "an architectural museum," played a key role in the formation of the Maryville College Historic District. Comprising nine buildings, the Historic District was officially placed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1982. Five more buildings were registered in subsequent years.

"Historically, the college built as the need arose and when the money was available, and built in the style that was popular at the time. The major architectural trends of the past 150 years are represented here," said McNiell.

According to McNiell, such architectural diversity is common, especially among southern institutions. Much like Maryville College, many schools have a central campus of older buildings with more contemporary structures on the periphery.

While McNiell noted that a more uniform construction style might help to foster a stronger sense of community, variety also has its merits. Each building has its own personality, its own distinguishing features that link it to its era.

The oldest building on campus, Anderson Hall, was completed in 1870 and has an individual designation on the National Register, which was granted in 1975. Thanks to its distinctive tower, there is probably no other building on campus more closely associated with Maryville College. Beyond its recognizable Federalist facade, however, Anderson Hall has stories to tell that reveal more about the character of the College and its impact on the community than can be learned by a simple examination of its architecture.

Maryville College's policy of excluding none from its benefits by reason of race or color, not only set it apart from other institutions in the region, but also helped the college in its attempts to raise funds for Anderson Hall. Researching the history of the building, McNiell discovered a letter written in 1869 by a lieutenant in the Knoxville office of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, in which he commended the College for its policy and recommended a donation from the Bureau to the building fund.

According to McNiell, the construction of Anderson's Fayerweather Addition, which was completed in 1892, involved a unique fund-raising effort as well as the personal fund-raising plan of a Maryville native with dreams of acquiring land in Oklahoma. McNiell recounted a story told to her by Adele McKenzie about her father, Thomas Brody. As a young man, Brody drove the brick wagon used on the project to finance a ticket to Oklahoma where he hoped to stake a claim for land. After reaching his original goal, he reconsidered and continued on the job long enough to earn money for a return ticket in case his dreams of acquiring a homestead failed to materialize.

Of all the legends surrounding the buildings on the Maryville College campus, the most retold and beloved revolves around Bartlett Hall and the heroic efforts of student Kin Takahashi. Under his direction, fellow students made more than 300,000 bricks for the structure, and he spent two years after graduation diligently raising funds before returning to Japan. Completed in 1901, Bartlett Hall served as the Maryville College athletic center until the 1923 completion of Alumni Gym and housed the YMCA until 1970. Currently undergoing extensive restoration and construction of a new addition, Bartlett Hall will be home to a new student center in fall 2000.

Throughout the years, although architectural themes changed, the spirit and determination that made Bartlett Hall possible remained steadfast. Following the loss of the original Carnegie Hall dormitory to fire in 1916, students and faculty cleaned 80,000 bricks from the old building for use in constructing its replacement, which was built in 1917. In their book By Faith Endowed, Carolyn Blair and Arda S. Walker '40, tell of the especially ardent efforts of the students, faculty and surrounding community to raise funds for rebuilding the dormitory.

Another common thread running through the tapestry of the Maryville College history is a sense of utility and resourcefulness. As needs changed, many of the buildings took on roles that were quite different than originally planned, and often the later use proved to be even more fitting.

A perfect example of this metamorphosis lies in Lamar Memorial Library. Located in the center of campus, it was built as a memorial to Thomas Jefferson Lamar. With its turret and stained glass, the building had from its very beginning a religious air. It wasn't until 1981, however, that it became the Center for Campus Ministry. In the almost 100 years prior, it had served as a library, museum, post office, bookstore, and print shop. Still home to the Center for Campus Ministry, the building was totally refurbished this year. In deference to its original service, letters carved into the woodwork in 1888 to designate alphabetized stacks of books have been repainted black to remind all who enter of the building's heritage.

With its high ceilings, Corinthian columns, and wealth of floor space, the first floor of Thaw Hall is ideally suited for its present day use as the Lamar Memorial Library, so much so that it is hard to imagine it as anything else. The original plans for the building, however, designated the first floor as a dining room at the request of the major donor, Mary Thaw of Pittsburgh. Begun in 1920, the building took four years to complete. The second floor was finished in 1921 and the space was given to the Preparatory Department, which remained until 1925. In 1924, the first floor was completed; however, it was never put into use as a dining hall. Because the College had more immediate need of new library facilities, the book collection and museum were transferred to Thaw Hall, where they remain today.

Whenever a new structure is erected on campus, it is naturally greeted with a great deal of interest. According to McNiell, certain buildings throughout the College's history have garnered more than a little attention, especially those that introduced a new architectural style into the mix.

"Willard House is classic Queen Anne and is probably the most authentic representation of an architectural style among all the buildings on campus. It was certainly the most luxurious. In fact, the president apologized to the students for its extravagance when he moved in, because student housing was shabby in comparison," McNiell said.

Completed in 1890, Willard House also captured the attention of the local press, McNiell said. A detailed description was printed, with special attention paid to the home's asymmetrical lines, dormers, porches and turrets.

In more recent times, the Fine Arts Center evoked the most dramatic response, McNiell said. "It really caused quite a stir. It was built during the 1950s, a very troubled era in the nation, and people were anxious and suspicious of anything different."

According to McNiell, the fervor associated with the Fine Arts Center did not extend to the other contemporary buildings that followed it. The Wilson Chapel, Sutton Science Center, and Cooper Athletic Center were all built in the modern style of the day, and were by and large accepted by the campus and the surrounding community, she said.

The Fine Arts Center probably received the most attention because it was the first and also the most flamboyant example of the modern architectural style.

Even though McNiell has devoted considerable time and energy to preserving the history of the buildings on campus, as well as the buildings themselves, she is quick to note that the College is far more than the structures that house it.

"The buildings provide a wonderful backdrop against which we live our lives, but it is the people who make the College.

It is the people who cook the meals and keep the buildings clean and comfortable and the people who are here to teach and to learn who make the campus," she said.

Throughout the decades in which she has been a part of Maryville College, McNiell said there has never been a clear "favorite" building among students. "We all develop attachments for various reasons. Some students have a great fondness for their residence hall and some for the building in which they had the most classes. It really depends on the individual experiences they have on campus."

In addition to serving the physical needs of the College, McNiell noted that the buildings serve as monuments to the individuals whose efforts made them possible. "They serve as reminders of who we are and the sacrifices so many people made to make education possible, affordable, and intellectually challenging. People are gone rather quickly, but buildings remain to help us remember."

Viola Lightfoot remembers

By Karen E. Beaty '94
Director of News and Sports Information

Although his contributions to Maryville College are widely known, Samuel T. Wilson is a person personally remembered by few today – some 55 years after his death.

Viola Lightfoot '34 remembers him.

An apprentice

"He was nice. Impressive," she said. "He was a tall sort of person, a nice looking gentleman; sort of had an air about him. I was expecting him to look like that."

Lightfoot met the Maryville College alumnus (1878) and president emeritus in 1930, just days after she arrived at the College for undergraduate study. A student assistant to Registrar Anna Jones '17, Lightfoot was called upon to type letters to family members and other documents for Dr. Wilson. Later, she aided the president emeritus in his "Second Century Beginnings" addition to his 1916 history book "A Century of Maryville College."

"Miss Jones admired him so much. She wanted to send him the best that she could for what he wanted done," Lightfoot said. "I considered it quite a compliment."

One of only three students who could type proficiently, Lightfoot said she worked for Jones almost every working hour that she was not in class. For 15 cents an hour, she took dictation and typed in Dr. Wilson's home on Indiana Avenue. Defying the rule that forbid female students from going downtown without a chaperone, she also took Dr. Wilson's letters to the Maryville Post Office – alone.

"Dr. Wilson knew how strict the rules were," Lightfoot said. "If I was caught, Dr. Wilson told me to refer the night watchman to him. He said: 'I'll take care of that.'"

It was during such encounters that Lightfoot said she would glimpse a "twinkle in his eye." Although described as "puritanical" in a Maryville Times editorial written at the time of his death, Dr. Wilson had a "keen sense of humor" and a mischievous side in his latter years, according to Lightfoot. When her work for him needed correcting, he always corrected it "in good humor" and without harsh criticism.

"But I tried to be careful," Lightfoot added, "because I wanted to please him."

When Viola Lightfoot, 90, hears or reads the name of Samuel Wilson today, the sessions of typing and writing in his home come to mind. What she remembers of his conversation and history book is the admiration he held for Maryville College and its founder, Dr. Isaac Anderson.

"He was always talking about how Maryville College stood out," she remembered. "He was proud that the College offered religious education – and that there was no detriment to the quality of the teaching because of [a religious influence]."

From those sessions, she also remembers students interrupting their work to ask Dr. Wilson about vocational choices and courses. Though she didn't know it at the time, Lightfoot would be offering the same advice to students who sought her counsel in the Registrar's Office only a few years later.

Mentors

Viola Lightfoot almost missed her own graduation. Figuring requirements and rolling up diplomas until the very last second, Lightfoot hurriedly slipped into the procession with 125 of her classmates and graduated cum laude.

Jones, the College's registrar since 1930, had passed away a month prior to Commencement, leaving Lightfoot and a staff assistant to determine who was graduating and who wasn't. Jones' death was "scary" to the student assistant for more reasons than the workload.

"She was my mentor. She made a lot of decisions for me," Lightfoot said of Jones. "I was fascinated with biology and couldn't make up my mind what to major in. She persuaded me to major in English ... She thought I'd be better in that kind of work than [in] teaching."

Before her death in April of 1934, Jones had permission to hire Lightfoot as assistant to the registrar. Lightfoot continued working after graduation, keeping the "assistant" title even though she was doing more leading than assisting in the office. In the late 1940s, Maryville College President Dr. Ralph W. Lloyd '15 gave her the official title of "Registrar." She remained the registrar until her retirement in 1974.

In more than 40 years of service to the College, Lightfoot humbly said she has only one "claim to fame." It is not the student records that she kept meticulously. It is not the self-imposed requirement to learn the pronunciation of every student's name. Nor is it the overtime she worked to stay current on changing requirements and an unyielding schedule.

Her claim to fame is the very thing that Dr. Wilson and Miss Jones modeled for her: a willingness to listen and a willingness to advise.

"I would listen to students, listen to their griefs," she said. "A lot of times I went beyond what was required. I was probably more patient than some teachers."

In the Rome, Ga., apartment where Lightfoot now lives, the walls are lined with artwork created by Maryville College students who tried to repay the mentor in the registrar's office.

A watercolor of Anderson Hall reminds her of an art student she "prodded, argued with, fussed at and encouraged" to graduate. It worked; Lightfoot watched her walk across the Commencement stage.

The former registrar occasionally receives letters from former students. They are the reasons, she said, she wouldn't choose biology if she – or Miss Jones – had it to do all over again.

"I made several friends, and I liked the academic atmosphere, but I also learned a lot about human beings and relationships," she said. "I liked my job."

MC ranked one of best in U.S. News ranking

For the fifth time in the last six years, Maryville College has been listed in U.S. News and World Report's ranking of the 10 best liberal arts colleges in the South. The national magazine annually judges colleges and universities for their academic excellence and publishes rankings in its weekly magazine and educational guide, "America's Best Colleges."

The only Tennessee institution listed in the category, Maryville College ranked seventh and tied with Asbury College in Kentucky and Columbia College in South Carolina. Berea College of Kentucky ranked first.

"Certainly, we are very pleased to be recognized again by U.S. News and World Report," said Maryville College President Dr. Gerald W. Gibson. "High school students conducting college searches use rankings like the one U.S. News publishes when deciding what schools to apply to, so we hope this ranking will help our recruiting efforts this year."

Maryville tied for ninth place in the rankings last year. While Gibson admitted that he liked the No. 7 slot better, he pointed out that the methodology used by U.S. News and World Report to choose "Top 10" schools changes year to year. The magazine may compare the same measures of a quality education – academic reputation, student retention, faculty resources, student selectivity, financial resources, alumni giving and graduation rates – but the measures may be weighted differently from one year to the other, he said.

In its "best value" subcategory, U.S. News and World Report ranked Maryville College sixth among southern liberal arts colleges. The rankings report 86 percent of the student body at Maryville receives grants based on need.

Rankings and college education-related stories were published in the Aug. 23 issue of U.S. News and World Report. "America's Best Colleges" guide went on sale

Aug. 24.

Templeton recognizes Maryville for character and service

"Intelligence plus character - that is the goal of true education."

Maryville College has once again been recognized by the Templeton Foundation for leadership in the area of student character development. Two of the College's programs, the Freshman Curriculum and the Student Literacy Corps are featured in a guidebook entitled The Templeton Guide: Colleges that Encourage Character Development, which was released nationwide in October. Designed for students, parents, and educators who believe that character matters, The Templeton Guide contains profiles of exemplary college programs in ten categories, including First Year Programs and Volunteer Service Programs, two areas in which Maryville College excels.

Since its inception five years ago, the Student Literacy Corps has grown into one of the nation's most respected college-based literacy programs, according to Jen Serio of the Student Coalition for Action in Literacy Education. Serio said Maryville's program is one of the few directed by students and that SCALE often uses the Maryville College Student Literacy Corps as a model for other schools interested in developing their own literacy initiatives.

The Templeton Guide cited as exceptional three areas of the Student Literacy Corps—MC Families, the Blount County Jail, and the Blount County Children's Home. The highest praise came in the summary of the profile: "At Maryville College, graduates develop sound values through outstanding examples of service."

In its description of the Freshman Curriculum, The Templeton Guide said: "By engaging students in application of academic skills to concrete life situations, the program challenges students to take responsibility for their environment, their society, and themselves." The quote precisely describes what the College intended to achieve when it developed the current Freshman Curriculum in 1996, said Dr. Peggy Cowan, coordinator of the Maryville College General Education Curriculum. In honoring the Freshman Curriculum, The Templeton Guide featured Mountain Challenge, Perspectives on the Individual, Perspectives on the Environment, and Perspectives on the American Community, noting that such courses "lay the foundation for a liberal arts education that supports Maryville College students in developing informed ethical judgement, a commitment to service and global citizenship, and a sense of responsibility for the common good."

Though recognized in separate categories by the Templeton Foundation, the underlying goal of both programs is the same—to develop leaders for productive lives in a changing world, which is an overall goal for the College as well, and one for which the liberal arts education is ideally suited, according to President Gerald Gibson.

"We are very proud of Maryville College's work to help students develop the strong values that will serve them well beyond their college years, said Gibson. "Character development is a lifelong process, and we believe that colleges and universities have a very important and unique role to play. We are delighted to be among the institutions profiled in The Templeton Guide," said Gibson.

$1.7 million grant expected to transform classroom instruction

In a word, it will be transformational.

That was how Maryville College President Gerald W. Gibson described the impact a $1.7 million Title III grant will have on academics at Maryville College. The College learned of its selection as a grant recipient in late August.

"What Title III will bring to this campus in terms of equipment, instruction and access to information is hard to imagine," Gibson said. "We are very excited about what this project will mean to Maryville in the 21st Century and what it will mean to our current and future students."

Earmarked for instructional technology, the funding will come from the U.S. Department of Education under Title III of the Higher Education Act. The exact amount of the grant ($1,749,982) will be financed – 100 percent – with federal funds.

The grants are highly competitive. This year, 262 colleges and universities applied for Title III grant funding; only 56 were approved.

Maryville College will receive approximately $350,000 each year for five years. In the current academic year, $349,997 will fund new computers and printers for all full-time faculty members, one permanent multimedia "smart" classroom in each of the academic buildings, two mobile multimedia units, one laser-networked printer for each division office and basic computer equipment for the start-up of an instructional technology center.

Throughout the five-year grant period, Title III will fund salaries and benefits for a director of instructional technology and an academic computer technician. A "generous annual software budget" will also be a reality during the five-year funding, as well as on-going additions to the Instructional Technology Center, the mobile multimedia units, computer classrooms and faculty development workshop schedules.

While instructors across campus are excited about the equipment and instruction, many are also excited about the semester-release time, summer stipends and travel allowances available for those chosen to participate in the Faculty Instructional Technology Fellow Program.

Unlike many grants, Title III proposals allow colleges and universities to shape the nature of the project – the work plan – to meet the greatest needs of the campus, said Karen Wentz, Maryville College's Title III Project Director.

"In the proposal, we described the College's strengths, weaknesses and problems," Wentz explained. "And we described the College's strategic plans, setting forth our goals and objectives. The activity in the grant is the solution to fulfill aspects of those goals."

The MC2000 Plan, a strategic plan approved by the College's board of directors in 1993, specifically calls for the establishment of a state-of-the-art instructional technology center and aims for the development of "instructional use of technology that contributes significantly to the educational experience of students."

Title III grant funding will definitely help meet that goal, Gibson said.

$10,000 given in honor of Fighting Scot

Kevin Hedrick, a senior at Maryville College, was named a Division III College Football Scholar Athlete by the Burger King Corporation.

In honor of Hedrick's outstanding athletic and academic achievements and his commitment to mentoring the community's youth, Burger King Corporation donated $10,000 to the Maryville College general scholarship fund in his name. The award was presented by Burger King Franchisee Russ Seus and other Burger King officials during the Oct. 9 Maryville College vs. Bridgewater College home football game.

Kevin's parents, Willie and Marie Hedrick of Sevierville, were on hand for the half-time presentation along with Maryville College President Dr. Gerald W. Gibson and Athletic Director Randy Lambert '76.

An engineering major in the dual-degree program at Maryville College, Hedrick has maintained a 3.9 G.P.A., while starting as a defensive end for the Fighting Scots. In addition to his academic and athletic endeavors, Hedrick also serves as a math tutor for both elementary and college students. He also works with the Department of Transportation and is an assistant Sunday school teacher.

During the 10-week program, Burger King Corporation named eight scholar athlete award winners (two from each division) each week.

According to Maryville College Head Football Coach Phil Wilks, Hedrick is respected by his teammates on and off the field.

"He played just as hard and aggressive when he came here as a freshman as he does now," Wilks told a reporter with the Knoxville News-Sentinel. "He is so quiet and so smart, then he gets on the football field and he really turns it on. He is the kind of person who regardless of what he does, he does it well."

Burger King franchisee Russ Seus presented a $10,000 check to Kevin Hedrick during the Oct. 9 game.

Cate, Ziegler join College Cabinet

In July, Maryville College President Gerald W. Gibson announced the promotion of Mark Cate to Vice President for College Advancement and the appointment of Rick Ziegler '70 to Vice President and Dean for Enrollment. In their new positions, Cate and Ziegler are now serving on the College's seven-member Cabinet.

Cate, a Maryville native, succeeds Elton Jones, who was named Assistant to the President for Foundations and Major Gifts. Cate began working at the College in 1991, and since then has held positions in Residence Life,

Mark Cate

Career Services, Alumni and Parent Relations and, most recently, Development. As Director of Development, he planned and implemented fund-raising components including direct mail, phonathon, community campaigns, faculty/staff campaigns, student campaigns and personal visits.

A 1987 graduate of Carson-Newman College, he earned a secondary teachers certification in 1991 and a master's degree in educational psychology from the University of Tennessee-Knoxville in 1994.

Ziegler, a 1970 alumnus of Maryville College, worked as Director of Admissions for Susquehanna University in Selingsgrove, Penn., from 1985 until his appointment at Maryville.

While at Susquehanna, Ziegler was responsible for training and directing staff, building recruitment strategies and meeting enrollment targets for the liberal arts school of 1,600 students.

Prior to 1985, Ziegler was Director of Admissions and Financial Aid at Phillips University in Oklahoma. From 1973 until 1976, he was an admissions counselor at Maryville College.

He is a member of the National Association of College Admission Counselors, the Pennsylvania Association of College Admission Counselors and the American Assembly of Collegiate Registrars.

Rick Ziegler '70

He has also worked as a consultant with George Dehne and Associates.

Ziegler succeeds Donna Davis '83, who worked as Vice President for Admissions and Enrollment from 1992 until June 1999. Davis, who began employment with Maryville College in 1979, left to pursue a doctoral degree.

President Gibson said he is pleased with the experience new members will bring to the Cabinet and is looking forward to working with them.

Staff changes announced

Ned Willard replaces Mark Cate as director of development. A 1990 graduate of Rhodes College, Willard joined the Maryville College staff in 1995 as an area coordinator in Residence Life. A year later, he joined the College's admissions staff as counselor. In his new position, Willard is responsible for helping the College meet Annual Fund goals.

Monica Blackburn Alsup '97 was named the College's director of alumni and parent relations. Before her return in August, she was a financial aid officer at Georgia Tech in Atlanta, Ga. A native of Bethel, Ohio, Alsup is married to MC alumnus Thad Alsup '98.

Alsup succeeds Karen Beatty '94, who moved into the College's public relations office and now works as the director of news and sports information.

Laurie Grogan was named director of public relations in September. A graduate of the University of Tennessee, Grogan was the public relations manager for MasterCraft Boat Company in Vonore, Tenn., prior to joining the staff at Maryville College. She has also worked as a copywriter for Computational Systems Incorporated, a senior public information officer for Oak Ridge Associated Universities and a reporter with the Oak Ridger.

Alan Reynolds rounds out the public relations office as the College's publications manager. A native of Crossville, Tenn., and graduate of Tennessee Technological University, Reynolds worked for TAP Publishing prior to his move to Maryville. As publications manager, Reynolds will be responsible for graphic design and printing projects.

Christmas at Willard House set for Dec. 5

The Blount County Chapter of the Maryville College Alumni Association is hosting its annual "Christmas at Willard House" on Sunday, Dec. 5, 3-5:00 p.m.

With the spirit of Christmas in the air, this is a perfect time to come back to campus. Local alumni, parents, friends, faculty, staff and students are invited to see Willard House decorated in Victorian fashion while enjoying hot cider, hors d'oeuvres and Christmas music.

"Beat the cold of winter; come enjoy the warmth of friends," said Monica Alsup, director of alumni and parent relations.

College helps Maryville 'have it all' in A&E series

Maryville, Tenn., is among 10 cities that "have it all," according to an A&E Network weekly television series called "A&E Top 10."

The television producers focused on unique programs of the College - Mountain Challenge and Public School ESL (English as a Second Language) - and the programs' contributions to the community. Education, retirement, safety, recreation and economy were five criteria used in the "Top 10 Cities that Have It All" selection process.

Upon graduation, these alumni never thought they would be part of the Class of 2002, but here they are! Joe Gilliland '55, Marcia Williams Kling '56, William "Wil" Lukens '91, Rebeccah Kinnamon Neff '62 and David Russell '72 have agreed to serve on the Alumni Board's Class of 2002. During their three-year term, these five will "represent the Alumni Association in order to promote the interests of Maryville College and to maintain mutually beneficial relations between the College and alumni."

The Alumni Board's Class of 2002 began its service with the fall Alumni Board meeting Sept. 10-11.

After receiving his bachelor of arts degree from Maryville in 1955, Joe Gilliland went on to earn a master of arts degree from the University of Missouri. Once finished, he spent two years serving in the United States Army. He went on to become a reporter and editor for newspapers in both Arkansas and middle Tennessee. Before retiring in August, he was the assistant to the director of public affairs for the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Joe met his first wife, Joan Frei Gilliland '54, while a student at Maryville College. The Gilliland's two children graduated from MC: Anne Gilliland '79 and Don Gilliland '83.

Joe Gilliland '55

Joan passed away in 1997. Joe married Janet Whitmore '56 in July 1999 (see Class Notes), and they now live in Asheville, N.C.

Joe will serve on the Public Relations Committee of the Alumni Board.

Marcia Williams Kling (known as "Miss Marcia" to many people who grew up in the Chattanooga area) is the director of community affairs and reporter for WTVC News Channel 9 in Chattanooga. As "Miss Marcia," she has been a longtime television host of the children's program "Funtime."

Marcia enjoys singing and is a soloist for Second Presbyterian Church. She is also actively involved in the Salvation Army Advising Board, Ronald McDonald House and Family and Children's Services. A cancer survivor, she was a winner of the American Cancer Society's Courage Award in the late 1980s.

Marcia and her husband David have two children: John David and Maria.

Marcia Kling '56

As a member of the Board, Marcia will serve on the Public Relations Committee. Upon graduating from Maryville College in 1991, William "Wil" Lukens went on to receive his master of business administration degree from the University of Tennessee, Knoxville. After several years with DeRoyal Industries, he is now vice president of E-Commerce relations for California-based Omnicell Technologies.

Wil, wife Jennifer and their two children, 3-year-old Wade and 2-year-old Caroline, live in Knoxville. Wil is a member of Central Baptist Church in Bearden. In serving his community, he has been a girls soccer coach for KYSO.

Wil Lukens '91

The Board's Alumni Events and Programming Committee welcomes Wil into its ranks.

Rebeccah Kinnamon Neff came to Maryville College from Kernersville, N.C. After graduating from MC, Rebeccah received master of arts and doctoral degrees from Duke University.

During her life, Rebeccah has lived all over the country. She has had the opportunity to live in Romania and Iran, as well as Ohio and Washington D.C. While in Iran, Rebeccah was a professor for a woman's college in Tehran.

Currently, Rebeccah is the director of creative solutions for SAS Institute, Inc. She and her husband, Harry, live in Raleigh, N.C. In her spare time, Rebeccah enjoys spending time in her garden and creating pressed-flower art.

Rebeccah will serve on the Development Committee.

David "Dave" Russell lives in Knoxville with his wife Carol Ann Abel Russell '72. They have three daughters: Erin, Sarah and Laura.

David Russell '72

Erin is currently a junior at Maryville College.

Dave received a master of arts degree from the University of South Carolina. Since that time, he has worked in radio and television broadcasting and advertising. The former vice president of Roberts and Russell Advertising, he is now self-employed.

Dave is involved in fellowship church leadership for the Evangelical Free Church of America, as well as with Vine International, an organization providing aid to medical missions in Central America. He enjoys boating with his family when he can.

As a member of the Board, he will be serving on the Parent Ambassadors Committee.

Homecoming 2000 announced

Homecoming 2000 on the Maryville College campus will be celebrated Oct. 13-15. Reunions will be celebrated by those classes with class years ending in a '5' or '0.' The class of 1950 will be celebrating its 50th year since graduation; the class of 1975 will be celebrating its 25th year since graduation.

If you would like to help with a reunion, please contact Monica Alsup, director of alumni and parent relations, at 865/981-8197.

Other fall events planned for 2000 include Family Weekend (Sept. 22-23) and Long Weekend (Oct. 20-22).

Alumni called upon to help reach 50-percent goal

The Executive Board of the Maryville College Alumni Association and the College's Office of Advancement are working together to help reach the 50-percent alumni participation goal by the end of this fiscal year (May 31, 2000).

In 1998, the Alumni Board set a goal of 50-percent alumni participation by the year

2000. In tracking that goal, Board members set a 45-percent participation goal in fiscal year 1998-99, and alumni came through with a record-breaking 46 percent of alumni making a gift to Maryville College. (The national average of alumni participation among peer institutions is 32 percent.)

"There is much work to be done," said Ned Willard, director of annual giving. "In order to reach levels that rival prestigious institutions, we need to increase the support received from alumni."

According to Willard, foundations and rankings, like those found in U.S. News and World Report, consider the financial support of alumni as a critical indicator of "customer satisfaction" among its graduates.

Phonathon callers (all MC students) are working year-round to contact all alumni and ask them for a gift. Willard asked alumni to remember the 50-percent participation goal when on the phone with student callers.

Three Reasons to Establish Your Own Endowment

There are many reasons you should consider establishing your own endowment at Maryville College. Here are three:

1. Unending Annual Gifts

As a friend of Maryville College, you probably make annual gifts to support the College and, quite possibly, gain great personal satisfaction from doing so. Our endowment program allows you to make certain that your annual gifts continue in perpetuity after you are gone. The rule of thumb to "lock in" your annual gift is to give an amount equal to 20 times the annual gift. For example, a bequest of $20,000 to the general college endowment would generate an annual gift of at least $1,000 a year and allow a portion to be reinvestment for future inflation.

Endowment funds are basically investment funds that preserve principal and make payments (or gifts) to the College from the earnings. Assets are commingled for the sake of simplicity and economies of scale, but the College maintains records of the individual endowment funds. After you are gone, your endowment would take your place in providing annual support for the College. And this could continue indefinitely.

2. A Lasting Legacy

This is one of the most powerful reasons to establish an endowment. The ongoing nature of these funds provides an unending way to not only support Maryville College, but to remind family and friends of one's deeply held values and commitments.

Grandchildren, great-grandchildren and further generations will encounter their own heritage as they see "their" endowment at work. If you want to build a lasting legacy to benefit the College and inspire people for years to come, establish your own endowment.

3. Financial Stability

Maryville College derives financial strength from its endowment funds. Just knowing that we can count on a stream of endowment income permits us to make better financial projections and to plan for the future more confidently.

Also, income from endowments allows the College to do some things it might not otherwise be able to do. One donor established an endowment to provide students with scholarships for overseas study. Another donor is establishing an endowment to provide scholarships for students who will do service in the area of literacy.

Another point: An organization with strong endowment assets tends to draw recognition and prestige as well as support from other donors.

Several Possibilities

You can establish your endowment in several ways. You could do it all at once by making a major gift of cash or marketable assets. You could also start now with a modest amount and add to your endowment later. Or, you could make all the arrangements now to establish your endowment in the future. You can do this through a bequest in your will or other planned gift such as a charitable gift annuity, insurance policy or even the use of a charitable trust. Those who establish endowments through their estate plans are eligible for membership in the Society of 1819.

You can establish your endowment for a variety of purposes. For example, a named scholarship fund can be established for $25,000. Endowing a particular building on campus or providing for faculty development are other options.

Many of our alumni and friends have discovered that endowment building is one of the most satisfying means of supporting Maryville College. If you want to learn more about this program and how you can participate, contact Lyn French, Maryville College's Director of Gift Planning, at 865/981-8191 or use the tear out form (located in the back) in this copy of FOCUS.

DONORS ANSWERING CALL TO MEET KRESGE CHALLENGE

Since the Kresge Foundation of Troy, Mich., issued a $500,000 grant in early July, challenging Maryville College to raise the remaining funds needed to complete the student center

Jean and Harold Lambert '50 of Maryville are a perfect example of Graham's sentiment. In response to the Kresge Challenge, they pledged $500,000 toward the effort in October. The gift followed a gift of $500,000 made earlier in the year.

Cindy said. "We put it into the back of our minds until we received an invitation to the Atlanta event and decided we wanted to hear more."

Just a few days before the Atlanta event, fire destroyed Fayerweather Hall.

Originally, the Lamberts intended for their gifts to be anonymous but had a change of heart when requested by the College to share their story.

"This heightened our awareness of the need to take action and make a gift," Cindy explained. "And on the way to the event, as we were thinking about how to budget for a gift, we remembered some stock we had not included in our long-term financial planning. We decided to make the gift with that. It's been a very attractive option for us."

"We thought it might inspire others to make a contribution, just as we were inspired," Harold said. "We're willing to do all we can to help make the new student center a reality."

Giving appreciated stock is a convenient way to make a gift to the College, according to Graham.

"We're seeing more and more donors make gifts to the Campaign and in support of the Kresge Challenge through gifts of stock,"

project by Aug. 1, 2000, response has been enthusiastic and meaningful.

"We are so proud of the school and what it means to Maryville. The community would really be lost without Maryville College," he added.

The College has received nearly $1,100,000 in gifts and pledges in support of this challenge, and is actively pursuing the remaining $315,000 needed to meet the challenge and finish the project.

Vince and Cindy Evans, parents of Brandon Evans '01, were inspired to make a gift to Maryville College after a series of events prompted them to attend the Atlanta campaign event at the home of Nancy Gamble Bromley '73.

"The commitment by the Kresge Foundation is a timely one, and I truly believe it has helped to spark people who have been thinking about ways to help the College," said Anna Graham, Director of the MC2000 Campaign. "To be under the half-million-dollar mark for this project is exciting. So many people have renewed their commitment and enthusiasm for this special place – at this special time in the history of the institution."

"Vince and I were driving back to Conyers [Ga.] after a football game (Brandon is a member of the Fighting Scots football team), and we were talking about how great it would be if we could make a gift to the MC2000 Campaign," Graham said.

"We're able to give something back – not just the tuition we pay – and not just in support of this building but also in support of the whole College – faculty, staff, students – who have helped make Maryville a good place for Brandon," Cindy said.

Christine "Teenie" Hayworth, mother of Deborah Hayworth '81 and member of the MC Board of Directors, is an avid promoter of all things Maryville College. And even though she did not attend MC, her enthusiasm for the College never dwindles.

"I always get the biggest kick when I'm back on 'my' campus," Hayworth explained. "I really think this excitement I feel has its origins in the fact that I didn't attend a liberal arts college. It's left a big hole in my life, especially when I look at what it's meant to our children – all of whom attended liberal arts colleges.

"The sense of community that prevails at these schools is immense," Hayworth added, "and they've taken it into their adult lives as well – as good citizens and parents."

Recruited to the Board of Directors by President Gerald Gibson and former director Natalie Haslam, Hayworth was surprised by the request.

"I've never served on an educational board before," she explained. "When I was recruited, I wondered what I could possibly contribute to Maryville College."

Hayworth serves on the Board's Student Development Committee. In addition to her work on the Board, she and her husband Ray have made a financial commitment to the MC2000 Campaign. Also, they have helped enhance student life by renovating the Margaret Ware Dining Room and the foyer of Pearsons Hall.

"Teenie has really helped make two of the primary gathering spots for our students and prospective students – particularly now, since the Fayerweather fire – much more attractive environments," said Vice President for Student Development Bill Seymour.

For Mary Swain Wood '29, there was never any question that she would attend a liberal arts college.

"In my family it was understood that first you went to a small, private liberal arts college, and then you could go on to anywhere else you wanted."

The year Wood entered college was a providential one for MC.

"Centre (in Danville, Ky.) was the college for my grandfather, my father, my brother and my brother's son. The year I entered college, Centre was merging with the women's college down the road and weren't accepting any other women as freshmen. So the family looked for the nearest Presbyterian school."

The nearest Presbyterian school just happened to be Maryville College.

She had little idea of what college was like. Her hometown, 30 miles outside of Louisville Ky., had a little high school with no laboratory

"I don't think anyone was as ill-prepared for college as I was," Wood said. "But I loved Maryville once I got there – the campus and the town. I remember walking to the Quaker church (now St. Andrew's Episcopal Church) for Sunday services because it was the longest walk back with our beans."

When the depression hit in 1929, Wood's family was unable to send her back for her senior year, so she got a job teaching elementary school in Kentucky. Eventually, she was recruited by the Scott Foresman Publishing Company as a reading consultant for the state of Texas. Her job: to promote a new line of reading materials, starring now familiar characters Dick and Jane.

"Every first grader in the state of Texas thought I was Dick and Jane's mother," she said.

When Wood heard about the MC2000 Campaign, the Fayerweather fire and the Kresge Challenge, she decided to make a gift in addition to her regular gifts to the Annual Fund.

"I'm so happy about MC today," she said. "The growth and improvement thrills me. You know the Presbyterian Church is known for believing in education, and I believe MC has successfully met that goal.

"I was a student when Dr. Wilson was president, and I never shook hands with him," Wood added. "I feel like if I were a student today, Dr. Gibson would know me."

Center for Campus Ministry nears completion, fund-raising goals

Workers paid close attention to detail when it came to restoring the Center for Campus Ministry. A metal roof and white “dimples” across the top of the building would have been visible features of the building in 1888.

by Anna Graham, CFRE, MC2000 Campaign Director

As the students returned to campus for the fall semester, they found workers completing the restoration of the Center for Campus Ministry (CCM).

It’s easy to see why this project has been particularly meaningful to Andy McCall, project manager and Maryville College’s director of physical plant. The restoration of a building President Gerald Gibson has called “an architectural jewel in the center of our campus” has been a labor of love.

When McCall talks about the project, he’s careful to stress that this has been a restoration – not a renovation.

He and his team paid close attention to detail when it came to replacing the roof, plaster and woodwork. Walls were re-plastered rather than replaced with sheet rock. A large part of the wood used for replacing missing or damaged detailed pieces came from the College Woods.

“About 10 years ago we cut down a few dead oak trees, and we saved the wood,” McCall explained. “It was too valuable to throw out, and I’m glad we didn’t.”

The metal roof is a near replica of the original one. The white “dimples” across the top of the roof were discovered in an old photograph of the building. When the roofers took the existing roof off, McCall explained, they found what they believe is the original metal roof (that had been covered with tar) with some of the bases of the white dimples remaining.

“[Roofing company] Baird and Wilson was able to reproduce the original pattern of the roof and spacing of the dimples,” the project manager said.

The sole original door remains as the door to the office of support staff member Rachel Moore ‘67 and has been reproduced for the entrances to the building.

Dr. Chad Berry, assistant professor of history and member of the Maryville City Historic Zoning Commission, found this attention to detail particularly appealing.

“The detail of the small squares of glass, based on this original door, really becomes a motif for the whole building,” he said.

The stained glass borders on the windows throughout the building continue this theme, and memorialize or honor individual donors. They were designed and crafted by Catherine Carter-Stiles ‘81.

The Reverend Stephen Nickle, chaplain and director of volunteer services, said he is pleased with the results.

“It’s a warm and hospitable space that invites people to come in and seek nourishment,” the chaplain said. “If there were a day when all the staff was home in bed with the flu, the open doors of this place would continue to draw people into a community.”

According to McCall, the building is equipped with all safety, ADA, electric and fire requirements.

“It should be a good building for a long time,” he said.

Of the $700,000 needed to restore the building, $80,000 remains to complete the fundraising. For more information, please contact MC2000 Campaign Director Anna B. Graham at 865/981-8200.

Inside the CCM, walls were re-plastered. Wood work that was missing or damaged by water leaks was replaced by oak trees salvaged from the College Woods.

Margaret Purcell ensures Gamble legacy lives on

by Lyn French, Director of Gift Planning

The following article is reprinted from the Fall 1999 edition of MC Futures, the planned giving newsletter for friends and alumni of Maryville College.

Among the family names that punctuate the chronicles of Maryville College is that of Gamble. There have been Gamble board members, Gamble benefactors and Gamble students galore. There is even a Gamble Hall, named after Joe Gamble who was a student, board chairman and benefactor.

Far away in California, Margaret Gamble Purcell grew up an only child, learning the lore of Maryville College, where her grandfather, mother and father were all students – as well as scores of cousins, nieces and nephews – many of them twice removed. Other strands of Margaret's family were MC alumni as well, for example, her grandfather, Scales Amerine, who later owned the mill and the general store in Maryville.

Margaret's mother, Eva Amerine Gamble 1899, entered Maryville Preparatory School at the tender age of 12. It even required a special board vote to admit a child so young. When Eva graduated she was – and remains – the youngest student to graduate from the Preparatory School. This was in 1902 – a time when Fayerweather Hall, Bartlett Hall, and Willard House were brand new buildings on campus and Samuel Tyndale Wilson had recently assumed the college presidency.

Margaret Gamble Purcell

Margaret's father, Sidney Gamble, left Maryville College that same year. You might assume her parents had met at Maryville College, but no; they met as children in the school playground for a game of mumbletypeg.

"It was always understood," Margaret said of her parents, "that they would one day marry."

Sadly, however, Eva Gamble was widowed in 1915. She developed a furniture business to support her young family and, in her volunteer work, eventually built a national reputation as a leader among Christian women. She was a renowned public speaker and the founder and president of a statewide Christian women's association in California.

In 1920, at the age of 10, Margaret first traveled by train across country to Maryville, Tenn., for a Gamble family reunion.

"A five-generation photograph was taken at the time," she recalled.

Because her mother held it important to maintain family ties, Margaret traveled across country to Maryville every few years. At a reunion attended by more than 100 family members, she inquired of her Grandmother Gamble, "Are these people really all my relatives?"

Her grandmother responded, "Oh, Honey, that's just a few!" Many of them were Maryville College alumni.

Margaret did not go to Maryville College but inherited a love of learning. She earned her bachelor's degree at San Jose State University and a master's of art degree (in music education) at University of Southern California and became an educator and administrator in California schools. Yet her scholarship was rooted in East Tennessee. She wrote her thesis on the folklore and music of Cade's Cove.

Margaret and her mother became reconnected with Maryville College in 1968 when they were contacted by then-president Dr. Joseph Copeland and Board Chairman, Joe Gamble '26, a relative. They were inspired by the College's dedication to liberal arts and its Christian values.

Even after her mother's death, Margaret's relationship with the College continued. In 1992, she decided to make a provision in her living trust, leaving the bulk of her estate to Maryville College to establish the Margaret Gamble Purcell Chair of English. Her mother had requested that she leave the bulk of her estate to a Christian organization.

In a letter to then Interim President, Dr. Mark Ebersole, Margaret wrote: "This has taken a great deal of thought and many prayers. A great load has been lifted from my shoulders and I am sure my mother would be pleased with our decision."

But her philanthropy was not over. This January she established a $400,000 charitable gift annuity to benefit the College, the residuary of which will support the chair in English. This generous gift not only provides for the future of the College, but also provides Margaret a substantial income tax deduction and a generous income for life.

Giving to her parents' alma mater felt so gratifying that Margaret decided to make yet another gift. Inspired by the MC2000 Campaign and concerned for the loss of Fayerweather Hall, she recently donated appreciated stock valued at $50,000 for the new Student Center.

"I am delighted," she said, "to be able to help in this way."

Margaret recently had dinner with Maryville College President Dr. Gerald Gibson and his wife Rachel and pronounced the College "in good hands."

The Gamble name has been an illustrious part of the Maryville College chronicles in the 19th and 20th centuries. Margaret Gamble Purcell's gifts, as well as those from other Gambles, will ensure that the name remains an illustrious part of Maryville College for a long succession of generations in the new millennium.

We're sharing a lot of information in these pages of FOCUS. I hope it paints for you a good picture of things happening on campus.

But with a college of 1,001 students, 100 or so courses, two building projects underway, 10 athletic teams, a calendar full of fine arts events, and many club and organization-sponsored activities, it's difficult to paint a detailed picture – even in 52 pages.

As the Maryville College Alumni Association (MCAA) president, I'm happy to report that the alumni presence on campus is dynamic, too – just as it is represented on the cover of this autumn's FOCUS.

New members to the Association's Executive Board are listed on page 13. A complete listing of the Board is on page 51. We met Sept. 10 and 11 to discuss the work of the Association. It was a productive time. As in every meeting, Board members receive from the president an update on the present state of the College, and staff advisors share particular details about their respective departments: admissions, alumni programming, development, public relations, student development. And while there's no question about the positive direction in which Maryville is moving, the Executive Board is also apprised of the areas in which the College needs help – help from its alumni – to keep the momentum going.

If you read this column regularly, you've read some of my suggestions for how alumni can get involved. You've read about the importance of building a new student center, boosting alumni participation, identifying prospective students for the College, adding new members to the VISA Affinity Program, planning (and attending) outreach events. I still stand beside those "causes," and I hope other alumni do, as well. I'd like to share additions and updates, as they came from the September meeting.

Just as Maryville College grows, so does its needs.

- The VISA Affinity Program. Several years ago Maryville College established the VISA Affinity Card. The number of card carriers varied, as businesses joined and left the program. In recent years, carriers numbered about 300, but the Executive Board voted to have 200 new participants before Dec. 31, 2000.

With each purchase made on an affinity card, the Association receives a percentage of the purchase. And, as you've likely read before, the Association purchases gifts for students (see freshman T-shirt on opposite page) and sponsors alumni-student events with the money earned.

I'm happy to report that First Tennessee Bank has decided to re-market the VISA Affinity Card, which should make it easier for alumni to apply. Applications should be mailed this winter.

- The Milestone Traditions School Ring program. Alumni from reunion classes may have received a brochure in the mail this summer about the official ring now being offered to students who earn a minimum of 59 credit hours.

The MCAA took this program over last year, because Board members believed that a school ring could come to represent a tradition at Maryville College. And who better promotes and keeps traditions than alumni?

Through an agreement with ring manufacturer Milestone Traditions, the MCAA receives a small amount of money for each ring purchased. The MCAA has decided to use that money for a special ring ceremony, during which juniors and seniors will be presented the ring by President Gibson.

Martha Bess Ellis DeWitt '64 chaired a committee of alumni and students to plan the first ring ceremony. It was scheduled for Dec. 1 in the Proffitt Dining Room.

- The Career Services Task Force. Connecting alumni with students who need job experience has been an important issue of the Executive Board for some time. This summer, a seven-member committee of faculty, staff, students and alumni was formed to discuss students' internship and job placement needs and ways in which alumni can meet those needs. The last few months have been a great learning experience for everyone involved; we hope the next few months will be very productive.

Along those lines, the MCAA co-sponsored the annual Senior Luncheon with the College's Career Services Office. During the luncheon program, Austin "Cole" Piper '68, Ann Little Rigell '69 and Wil Lukens '91 gave students advice for life after Maryville College.

Although juniors and seniors may be too buried in exams, labs and Senior Thesis projects to realize it, there is life – for many alumni, long and fulfilling life – after Maryville College.

Alumni on the cover of this FOCUS illustrate that. D. H. Briggs '19 earned doctoral degrees at the University of North Carolina and returned to teach psychology at MC for almost 30 years. George Callahan '20 went to medical school after MC and became a doctor. He died in 1995 at the ripe old age of 94. Ethel Burchfiel '19 (the woman in the letter sweater) married Finis Cooper '18, and before their deaths in 1984 and 1990, they set up a trust fund for Maryville College. That trust fund, now maintained by daughter Maggie Cooper, has provided funds for (among many other things) the renovation of the physical education building. The building was renamed the Cooper Athletic Center in 1993. From the trust fund, Miss Cooper has also given money for the kitchen area in the new Bartlett Hall Student Center.

If any of those early century students were living today, I'm sure they would applaud the efforts of the MCAA to ensure that Maryville remains "for students for centuries."

Tim Topham '80, MCAA President

What's key in taking a picture of the largest freshman class in Maryville College's history?

"Location, location, location," according to Knoxville photographer Neil Crosby.

For the fourth consecutive year, Crosby has photographed the freshmen in their Alumni Association T-shirts.

The side entrance of Thaw Hall is perfect for the shot, he said.

"The steps are just the right height, the columns are nice in the picture and the sun is angled out of the way by the size of the building," he said. "The green grass in front really shows off the beauty of the setting."

Technically, Crosby uses a medium format camera that produces a negative roughly four times larger than a 35 mm negative. Standing no more than 20 yards from his 300+ subjects and using a standard 90 mm lens, Crosby said he is able to get a "true" picture, a proportionate picture.

He lines students up by height, starting with those over 6 foot. From there, every step is designated in inch increments: one step for those who stand 5-foot-11; another for those who stand 5-foot-10 and so on. The shortest students are asked to kneel or sit.

"It's the largest group I shoot," Crosby said. "But we can get it done in 30 minutes – largely because of that great location. Those steps are life savers."

Not only does the Class of 2003 total more than 300 students, but the College reported the largest student body ever – it's 1,001 strong.

Be sure to look for the next issue of FOCUS,
which will feature Maryville College athletics.
